TO WHOM IT MAY CONCERN

Just a line to confirm my involvement with Health-Connected Ltd. I have been active in charitable work in my constituency for many years and take a keen interest in businesses that have a health care focus in the area including dementia care. I became aware of Health-Connecter's strategy with regard to establishing a plan to connect those cared for in the community and care homes with hospitals, through the use of personal profiling and enhanced person-centred care, and courtesy of my previous work with Kingston Hospital and a local day care centre, felt that my support could be of benefit to the company and to the hospital. I am pleased to see that RemindMeCare is now used in Kingston Hospital and that the project is successfully underway.

In my former role as the UK Secretary of State for Business, Innovation and Skills, I was responsible for driving support for innovation in many forms, including Innovate UK, crowdfunding and the British Business Bank, and so naturally personally feel that tech innovation will be a key driver in the impending transformation of healthcare. As a result, I remain a firm supporter of the type of innovation that Health-Connected is seeking to bring to healthcare. I am also a shareholder.

As the current leader of the UK Liberal Democrat party, I have had to step down from my former position on the board of Health-Connected Ltd, but will continue to take a close interest in the business.
